

Cadillac Jack Names Dean Martin as Vice President of Operations

DULUTH, GA, June 12, 2006 - Cadillac Jack, a leading provider of electronic games to the global gaming market, announced today that Dean Martin has joined the Company as Vice President of Operations. Mr. Martin is responsible for strategic planning and operations for all of Cadillac Jack's rapidly growing product lines including Class II and III, charitable, redemption, and international gaming. In addition, he will also oversee global Customer Service operations.

Mr. Martin comes to Cadillac Jack from Scientific Atlanta, a leading Fortune 500 telecommunications equipment provider, where he was Director of New Product Development for Transmission Network Systems. During his more than 12 years at Scientific Atlanta, Mr. Martin was responsible for leading new product development and implementing high tech improvements into the manufacturing process. He directed the global design process across North America, Asia and Europe, and was an integral part of the company's assimilation of new products acquired through mergers and acquisitions into the international manufacturing and service organizations.

"Dean's extensive experience in operations and product development from a leading Fortune 500 technology company will enable him to make an immediate impact on the production processes for our gaming products," said Greg Gronau, President. "The growth we are experiencing both domestically and internationally requires that we continue to build and improve our world-class operations. Dean's exceptional track record in the technology sector positions us for continued growth and service to our customers."

"I am excited to be joining the rapidly growing gaming industry and I am very impressed with Cadillac Jack's forward-thinking management team and their determined focus on where they want to take the company," commented Dean Martin. "I look forward to my strategic role and the opportunity to work with the team to drive improvements in manufacturing processes, quality and service.”
